

WRITE AN IMPERATIVE SENTENCE WITH A COMPOUND VERB

Compound subjects and compound verbs can add variety and depth to your writing. Read on to enjoy a quick review of each component followed by specific .

I will walk to the store tomorrow. Madison and the students are leaving soon. Everything on the bed and everything in the closet was organized in under an hour. Clean your room. Honor thy father and mother. Let's take a quick look at each type of sentence and how you can tell them apart from an imperative sentence. Imperative Sentence Example 4: Walk through this door and turn left at the next hallway. Here's the main point of difference. Although usually at the beginning, the subject may also be found at the end or in the middle of a sentence. Parts of a Sentence Every sentence has two parts: a subject and a predicate. We opted for the cheaper room without a view. Let's begin with a quick review of each component before diving into specific examples using compound subjects and verbs. The subject of a sentence is generally defined as the noun or pronoun engaging in the activity of the verb. Neither the pillows nor the blanket looks good in this room. Use an imperative sentence to add more depth to your writing. Either the chicken or the beef in the freezer needs to be thawed for dinner tonight. Turn off the television. Meanwhile, she neither ran nor swam across the country. Declarative sentences don't issue commands, provide instructions, or offer invitations; they simply make a statement or offer an opinion. The fork and spoons need to be washed. I really want to test-drive that sports car.